BUSINESS

Speaker's ruling on the length of Notices of Motions

On 4 May 2016, during the giving of Notices of Motions, the Speaker cautioned a Member about the length of her Notice of Motion. Noting that all Opposition Members in the Chamber had already given their Notices of Motions and that only a few Government Members had taken the opportunity to do so, the Speaker accepted the Member's motion despite her concerns about its length.

Hansard (Proof): 4/5/2016, p. -
Standing Order 133.

Later commencement of General Business

On 11 May 2016 the Leader of the House moved that Standing and Sessional Orders be moved the following sitting day to postpone the commencement of General Business until the conclusion of Government Business, and to permit the House to sit past 1.30 pm if necessary. The motion was passed on division.

The next day, in accordance with the previous day's motion, the House concluded consideration of the Crimes (Domestic and Personal Violence) Amendment (Review) Bill before considering General Business, with the times allocated by the newly adopted Sessional Orders, namely Notices of Motions for Bills (for 20 minutes), Orders of the Day for Bills (for 60 minutes), and Notices of Motions or Orders of the Day (not being bills). To accommodate the consideration of General Business the House sat through the 1.30 pm lunch break, with the Deputy Speaker leaving the Chair at 2.13 pm and the Speaker resuming the Chair at 2.15 pm for the commencement of Question Time.

Hansard (Proof): 11/5/2016, pp. -

Standing Orders 63 and 97.

(Procedural note: Retiring Members often make valedictory speeches during their final days in the Parliament. Valedictory speeches provide Members with the opportunity to reflect on their time as a Member of Parliament, and to thank family, friends, colleagues and staff.

Valedictory (and inaugural) speeches are provided for by Standing Order 63, which states that a motion may be moved without notice, amendment or debate for the business before the House to be interrupted at a specified time (but not so as to interrupt a Member speaking) to permit Members to make valedictory or inaugural speeches without a question being before the House. Interrupted business is then resumed on completion of the speech or speeches.

The Standing Order also provides for a time limit of 20 minutes on valedictory and inaugural speeches.)
